About this record

How Clearly made this document, and how to check it. This page is Clearly's description of its own systems. It isn't a sworn statement.

This is a sample	The Taylors are a fictional family that Clearly shows professionals so they can see what a record looks like. Nothing in this document is real, and it isn't a record of any family. Its ID checks as a sample at getclearly.app/verify .
What Clearly is	Clearly is a co-parenting app. Both parents use it to message each other, keep the parenting schedule and share expenses. Each parent signs in to their own account.
How this was produced	Clearly's servers produced this document on Oct 23, 2026, 1:18 PM, directly from the family's records, when Dana Whitfield, family lawyer, asked for it with Alex Taylor's permission. Nobody edited it.
Messages can't be changed	Once a message is sent in Clearly it can't be edited or deleted, by either parent or by Clearly. What appears here is what was sent, word for word.
Times	Every time is set by Clearly's server when the thing happened, not by anyone's phone, and is shown in Pacific Time (America/Los_Angeles). "Read" is the first time the other parent opened the topic or message in Clearly.
What's included	Everything in the period: every topic, message, answer and agreement, every schedule change request and answer, and every shared expense. Nothing was left out.
Flags	A few entries carry a flag that states a fact: no reply for two days or more, a proposal not accepted, a schedule change declined, an expense disputed. Flags draw no conclusions about either parent.
What's never included	Drafts that were never sent, including any message Clearly paused for calmer wording before it was sent; a parent's private notes; and anything written by Clearly's AI. Only the parents' own words appear.
How to check it	Go to getclearly.app/verify and enter CLR-0000-S82Z-K8S5, or scan the code on the first page. Clearly keeps the fingerprint (SHA-256) of this exact file. Add the file there and it says whether it matches. A copy changed in any way, even by one character or page, won't match.
